

.Inequality/precariousness.
Suzanne van Rossenberg

.She receives unemployment benefit.
.I earn enough for two.

.She does whatever she wants to do and makes her own time schedules. She sometimes feels useless to society.
.Yes, I do like my job, and I do not mind being the only woman. But I do not like my company's ethics, and its lack of care of its employees. Within a year I would like to work for a smaller, friendlier company.

.She is an artist 24hrs/day.
.It is difficult for me to find time and energy to change jobs.

.She rents a small space, which also functions as her studio.
.The house I own is always a mess.

.She likes to visit me as much as possible.
.I like her to visit me as much as possible.

.She cleans the dirt she makes in my house and doesn't mind walking my dog.
.I hate leaving early for work every morning.

.She expresses her discontent with heterosexual norms in society in visuals and writing.
.I love her stories and paintings. They are beautiful.

.She wants to give me a piece of work.
.I say I will buy it for the normal price.

.She likes traveling to international exhibitions, symposia and workshops.
.I would like to go on holidays with her. She says she can't afford a holiday.

.She is writing this on my computer.
.I am in love with her.

.She would like to be successful as a writer and artist.
.I don't care about money.

.She's got to give me some, give me some of her lovin'.
.I'm not a greedy girl. I don't need the world.
